1. Know Why You're There

   Determine what exactly you are trying to accomplish. If there is no clear reason to meet, don't.

2. Prepare an Agenda

   An agenda tells you where you're headed, what you've covered and when you're done. Set up a team meeting folder at the beginning of the week. Collect all items to be covered at a meeting in this folder. This will save you time when you prepare an agenda and will also prevent you from forgetting important issues.

3. Enforce Ground Rules of Openness and Confidentiality

   Encourage people to be open to change and unconventional solutions. Enforce strict confidentiality so people feel free to tell it like it is.

4. Keep it Moving

   Don't get hung up on trivial points. If you feel you might be, say "let's get back to this later in the meeting" or schedule another time to discuss. Take a short break to end a deadlock. Also, a good strategy is to allot a specific length of time to each item.

5. Munch

   Every now and then, bring snacks or rotate the responsibility (maybe have a treasury) to provide funds for snacks at some meetings. This reduces tension and adds levity to a sometimes "heavy" environment.

6. Humor

   Use it. Research shows that groups who laugh get almost twice as much done as groups who don't.

7. Go Roundtable

   Give everyone a chance to talk. This is especially effective at the end of a meeting. It gives everyone the floor to update the group, get questions answered, or just pass.

8. Always end your meeting on a positive note or by providing positive feedback.

9. Follow-up in Writing

   Have minutes typed and distributed to all concerned within 24 hours. Keep it to one page if at all possible.

10. Encourage meeting attendees to evaluate meeting effectiveness.
